This column is being written in the hope that someone will say it is a copy of Mulligan's 'Owl'. Him who is unfortunate enough to make such a statement, I shall blast root and branch with great pleasure.

CHANCE.
Some men acquire fortunes by making soup, others by soap, yet others by watches. Andre Francois Mollete made his fortune by matches. It happened thus:

Francois was by no means perfect. No one is. Who, then, can blame Francois if he was obsessed with the sin of avarice? In most respects he was a good man and had a high moral sense. Chlothilde knew this and took advantage of it.

Chlothilde was his half-sister. She was flighty, perverse, extravagant, and forty; she was crafty, deceitful and thin. She lived with Francois because of his greed.

Francois and Chlothilde had a father in common. This worthy had decreed in his will that each should have a rather small portion of his immense fortune, and that they should live together. But if either disrupted the union—either by ejecting the other or by leaving of his own will—he would forfeit the remainder of the fortune, to the other.

For this reason Francois tolerated her, the while casting about for means of inducing her to depart.

Chlothilde, however, realized the advantages of her position.

She refused to use her sum of money; she refused to work; she refused to contribute towards her support. And she made such exacting demands on Francois that his thrifty soul was daily racked. Upon his refusal to grant her what she desired, she appealed to his finer senses as a man and he acceded.

Her extravagance came in cycles. The latest was just begun. A cousin had presented to her, on her birthday, a hat-pin. It seized her capricious fancy. It was merely a knitting needle with an amber elephant on the end, but she fell in love with it at first sight. She demanded a hat to use it. Then in quick succession she exorted a dress, a coat, gloves, a skirt, all of the particular shade of grey of the hat. These gained, she set her desire on a pony (of that shade of grey) to draw her carriage. The hat-pin inspired the idea of having the panels of the carriage cut into a silhouette of elephants and inlaid with amber. She had this done. Also she had the house redecorated in amber and grey, and obtained some wallpaper with elephants and trees with nests in them on it. This she had, in a desire to do it her own way, managed to hang upside down. All this Francois had borne and paid for. Now she demanded one of the new horseless carriages, in grey inlaid with amber, of course. Francois jumped up in great wrath and stormed:

"Leave me in peace or you'll leave me in pieces!"

"O you brute!" she sobbed. "You're threatening me now. You, my own brother! I suppose you want to see me dead? Well, if you want to, you shall!" With this she precipitated herself toward the gas oven, and, flinging it open, she thrust in her head and turned on the gas. Francois had not tried to stop her; he was too amazed. She could scent the gas now and tried to stir him into action; she was

The Parliament, which is an annual event sponsored by the Debating Union, is held as an aftermath of the Freshman Bovey Shield Contest. This year, Colonel Bovey, who is the sponsor of the Bovey Shield for Public Speaking, is to be the Speaker at the session.

The winner of the Freshman debate, Rodney Mahabir, will act as Prime Minister while David Schwartzman, the runner-up, will lead the forces of the Opposition. Each of the speakers will have one supporter who is allowed to hold the floor for ten minutes. The leaders are given 12 minutes in which to present their cases. Following this, the Members of Parliament will each be allotted five

Paul Ackerman Will Be Heard

To Be Guest of Engineer's Club Annual Banquet

Phi Epsilon Alpha, an honorary society in the Engineering faculty at McGill, will hold a dinner-meeting for the initiation of new members on Nov. 24, at 6.30 p.m. in the Faculty Club.

The guest speaker at this meeting will be Mr. Paul Ackerman, and his topic will be "The Engineer and His Duty to Mankind."

Mr. Ackerman was born and educated in Switzerland, and at present is a consulting electrical engineer in Montreal. He has been a contributor to technical literature, especially as a result of private research into the social-economic problem. He was a guest speaker on Nov. 5 at a meeting of the Engineering Institute of Canada, Montreal Branch, discussing "Industrial Democracy and its Survival," in which he applied engineering methods to the solution of social-economic problems.

The Phi Epsilon Alpha society was founded at McGill in 1934. Its aim is to show to the young engineer his position with respect to the other professions and his duty to society in general. With this in mind, the society holds regular dinner meetings at which guest-speakers address the members on non-technical subjects and lead the group in discussion.

Membership in the society is through election by the members. Second, third, and fourth year students of all engineering departments are eligible.

Charities Campaign Opens Today

Message to the Students:

The Amalgamated Charities' Campaign, which begins today, has become a McGill tradition, in regard both to its joint effort and to the humanitarian motives that inspire it. The charitable work of every religious group benefits from the campaign, which is annual testimony to the interest of our University in the welfare of the less privileged members of the community in which we live.

This year, I would urge you to give as generously as you can, because war has aggravated the problems of many people. The Charities that receive your contributions are helping the unemployed, the aged, the sick and the helpless. They are sometimes called upon to aid the widows and children of men who have volunteered for military duty overseas, and many of those who need assistance are still suffering from the effects of the first World War. All of these people still need assistance; all of them feel the impact of the higher cost of living.

I would not, however, base this appeal solely on the grounds of charity important as these are. This campaign offers an opportunity to make a practical contribution to the welfare of Montreal and of Canada.

If there is to be any progress toward a better world, it must come because men and women everywhere realize the personal meaning for them of that clear injunction: "Bear ye one another's burdens."

Finds Our Coeds Prettiest of All On Continent

By D. H.

Among the many crashers at the Freshman Dance last Wednesday were two third class petty officers of the U.S. Navy, Bob Tode of El Paso, Texas, and David Parker of Cleveland, Ohio. As they loitered along St. Catherine street alone and forlorn in a big city, they had the good fortune to meet two McGill boys. These, with true McGill hospitality, invited the poor homesick lads to attend the dance at the Union.

Under the mellow influence of McGill coeds, our two heroes soon forgot about their homesickness and began to get loquacious. We found out that both boys had seen active service. Bob had served in the Pacific, and had participated in the Battle of Midway; David, on the other hand, had served on the "Wasp" about six months before it was sunk. As be-hooves men of their wide experience, they had very definite ideas about the relative advantages of various places as far as women were concerned. "Long Beach," stated Bob, "is by far the best place on the west coast." There the women were endowed with all the qualities that made them desirable to men, and in addition to this were of a very friendly nature. As far as the east coast is concerned, the two found it a bit difficult to decide. Atlantic City had its advantages and so had New York. At last, how-

Peter Macaskill Speaks To IVCF on Christianity

Speaking to a Fireside meeting of the McGill Christian Fellowship, Peter Macaskill, third year Arts student, stated that without the resurrection of Christ the Christian faith is vain. He explained that Christianity depends upon a living, risen Saviour. He quoted the Apostle as saying "I can do all things through Christ which strengtheneth me, and again 'Christ maketh intercession for us.' These words of Christ in the present are not those of a dead person but of one who is alive today.

Charities

The Amalgamated Charities campaign opens today. We cannot impress too greatly on the minds of students and others concerned, the importance of the work of charitable institutions in and around the City of Montreal. If figures were available, we could indicate far more clearly than mere words the absolute necessity of work of this type even in wartime.

We cannot reiterate too often that the economic boon in wartime does not help those who are incapable of working. It does not help the aged, the crippled, helpless mothers, etc., etc.

Moreover we cannot condemn too harshly the student who feels proud of having dodged in some manner or other the student solicitor. This attitude has been surprisingly prevalent in past years and it is time that students considered the happiness and welfare of those less fortunate than ourselves. This deplorable condition should not exist in a university where the average mentality is supposedly high, and where as a rule students are supposed to be working to render service to the community who has sanctioned their stay at the University.

One Dollar, then, per student is the least students can do in this campaign, and if the solicitor does not get in touch with them they shall hand in their contribution to some one available such as the porters in the various buildings.

Selective Service

After three years of war the Government seems to have made little progress in the allocation and distribution of manpower. This applies especially to students at the university, who upon graduation, while they may have excellent qualifications for a particular branch of the services, are nevertheless constrained to accept some post for which they are not particularly suited. This is a sorry state of affairs especially when qualified men are needed in all fields requiring special abilities. Consider for example the case of an engineer who takes the Radiolocators course offered by the R.C.A.F., when he is qualified to teach considerable portions of the course.

How then can these conditions be remedied. The solution is obvious: institute a workable selective service system. This would unquestionably answer many questions and solve many problems that are now confronting, and will confront students in the near future. The much discussed question of the Arts and allied faculties would no longer be a source of worry; the uncertainty of women's role in the war would readily be known; accelerated courses in all faculties at once become necessary and infinitely more fruitful to the country's war effort. Moreover military training for students in all faculties becomes essential and its purpose even more clearly seen but different faculties and different categories will be given different syllabi.

We do not for a moment presume to tell the Government what to do, but this is one problem that it seems to us should have been solved some time ago—the proper and correct distribution of manpower in the armed services as well as in essential war industries.

The fruits of the selective service will be well worth the time and energy spent on the project.

Political Comment

Individual opinions expressed in this column are those of the contributors of the articles and not necessarily those of the Students Society or of the Managing Board of the McGill Daily.

Willkie vs. Churchill

Winston Churchill, according to Wendell Willkie, shocked the world in his recent pronouncement of empire. We consider this just plain nonsense on Mr. Willkie's part—and not very opportune nonsense at that.

Mr. Churchill was assuring the British people that in the present struggle his government was not overlooking the fact that the survival of the British Empire was one of the country's war aims. He is merely making explicit the qualification every government has implicitly made in its participation in the United Nations' cause; that in addition to the preservation of democracy and freedom, they shall emerge from the war with sovereignty unimpaired. In this connection, too many people forget that Great Britain, alone of the major Allied powers now fighting, declared war in defense of a principle, not because her territories had been attacked. Of course Britain is interested—as are all the Allies—in preserving her territories; but she is also obviously interested in preserving the rights of free men.

If Mr. Willkie is endeavouring to make the United States appear the martyr of this war, giving lavishly and unselfishly of her money, lands and industry to save freedom, he has set himself a very difficult task. Britons do not easily forget that at the time when they entered the war, the United States were according to the Neutrality Act, allowed to sell munitions to either side; that at the time when Britain alone stood against Germany, the United States was lending or leasing its war materials; that to date Britain has sent to Russia five times as many planes and tanks as she (Britain) has received from the "arsenal of Democracy"; that until Pearl Harbour the Americans' slogan was "Defense." Defense against what? Against aggression and the seizure of her territories by an invading enemy.

Britain has never denied sovereignty to those of her possessions that were capable of using it; Canada, Australia and New Zealand entered the war of their own free will, while Elre remained neutral. The power of the effort of these dominions, voluntarily carried through, is a cogent argument for the retention of this principle of empire.

Let's have a little less martyrdom among the United Nations, and a more realistic appreciation of just what we are fighting for.

—William Munroe, Arts 4.

The Willkie Problem

It was indeed difficult to decide whether or not Mr. Francis Allen's letter criticizing Mr. Wendell Willkie (among other things) even deserved the passing tribute of a reply, when one realizes how ridiculously naive almost everything he said so obviously was.

Let us examine his letter in some detail: A. First of all, he postulates that criticism of Allied leaders can do nothing but foster mistrust and discontent. Perhaps it may be of interest to Mr. Allen to learn that criticism is a fundamental attribute of our precious democratic way of life, and that even those who walk in high places are not exempt from such. Leaders are not God-given personages endowed with infallibility and immune from all human weaknesses. Yet some are appalled when Willkie, together with many other persons of high intellectual standing, level not unjust criticism at certain portions of Churchill's latest speech!

B. Mr. Allen further states quite boldly that there is no reason why Britain should not continue to govern her possessions so long as these possessions were willing to remain under British protectorate. "If Canada or Australia wanted independence," he continues, "they would not hesitate to ask for it, and they would discuss it with Great Britain." If we make the logical inferences it would seem, first, that all British colonies, apart from India, are perfectly contented with British rule, and secondly, that if they are not, they could simply ask their kind British God-fathers for independence and automatically receive it. It is evident that Mr. Allen is writing from unfortunate ignorance on the subject of Imperialism and of British Colonial Government generally. Let us be frank and realistic. It is a truism that the greatest friends of England are those who most clearly see her faults. Let no one ever harbour the idea that the situation in the British Colonies all over the world is one of blissful serenity and uncomplicated contentment. It is too apparent to those who know, that imperialism is pleasing only to those who are its direct representatives. When Willkie states that imperialism holds no place in the new order to which we all look forward, he is voicing the sincerest sentiments of the vast majority of people throughout the world. When Churchill maintains that the Atlantic Charter does not apply to India, when he further implies that England intends to hold what she has, he is certainly open to violent criticism from all freedom-loving citizens. It is not necessary now to plunge into the burning subject of India, about which country the vast majority of Canadians are so disconcertingly ignorant. Suffice it to say, however, that the history of British imperialism in India is not one of altruism, unselfishness, or glorious humanitarianism. It is deplorable from the point of view of India and of the Allies generally that no settlement has been reached. But may it be stated quite strongly that ninety-five per cent. of the guilt for this crime must be laid at the feet of the British. (If anyone desires to dispute this point, I and many others will be only too willing to oblige.)

C. Let us finally isolate from Mr. Allen's letter a most amazing contradiction which cannot fail to strike even the most unthinking individual. It is possible to reconcile the following statements: 1. "In any event it (the question of independence, etc.) is a problem that concerns solely those parties directly affected." 2. (Mr. Willkie) "is eager to ingratiate himself with a powerful but isolationist section of the American public."

Can any statement be more isolationist than 1. And can any ego and reasonable human being term Willkie an isolationist? You can call him a snake or an ostrich or an amplexus, but you cannot dub him an isolationist! A man who says that there are no distant points in the world any longer, that we must begin to think in global terms, that India is our problem—can such a man be termed isolationist? In conclusion, may I recommend that Mr. Allen and others like him (if there be any) in the future investigate their own qualifications before presuming to make statements which have neither factual basis nor logical connection.

Theatre Notes

"FLYING FORTRESSES" AT THE CAPITOL

Warner Brothers picture directed by Walter Forde. Scenario by Gordon Wellesley and Edward Dryhurst. Photography by Gus Drisse.

It seems a great shame that the average war film of today is almost pure propaganda with very little or no attempt being made to obtain a "partially decent story to back it up." "Flying Fortresses" is such a picture. True the photography is really excellent and the acting, what there is of it, is adequate but these are all overshadowed by a fifth rate plot and some remarkably poor dialogue.

When the curtain rises we find Richard Greene portraying a spoiled and drunken scion of wealth whose plane crashes after a big party with the tragic result that one of the passengers is killed. As a consequence the pilot, Donald Stewart, loses his licence though he was not in control at the time of the crash. Then somehow or other Richard meets up with Carla Lehmann, sister of the grounded pilot. Our young hero seems to be taking quite a fancy in her till he learns who she is and that she is a newshound trying to avenge her brother. Disgusted he joins the Ferry Command only to find that his former employee is now his instructor. In their first trans-Atlantic flight the two patch their differences just before they reach their destination.

From here the two return home to join the R.C.A.F. and get their commissions in the Air Force. The last scene is the only first rate one in the film. It depicts an air-raid on the power plants near Berlin and the resulting heroic actions of Richard Greene in which he proves that he has come to realize that life is much more than a series of drunken brawls.

Carla Lehmann as "Sky" Kelly's sister is not given an opportunity to display her acting ability but is only permitted to show off her charms. Perhaps the best performance is that of Sidney King in his dynamic characterization of Wing Commander the Lord of Otter-shaw. The other actors turn in adequate if not remarkable performances.

The added attraction featuring Russel Hayden, Anita Louise, and Noah Beery Jr., is a class B production. It shows the trials and tribulations of a New York hackie, taxi-cab driver, and his efforts to save up enough money to buy a filling-station. The program is rounded out by a marine band short and a remarkably comical cartoon.

"You Can't Escape Forever," the feature picture at the Princess this week is happily not at all what might be expected from the title. Nowhere does the story descend to the level of the "tear-jerker," or the everyday love story with its usual storms, and the inevitable happy ending in the last reel.

Instead, a good fast-moving newspaper story is presented, centred round a brilliant managing editor, his favourite reporter, who achieves a new high in portraying the idiosyncy and inefficiency of her sex in the newspaper world, and his opponent. This latter is a large scale racketeer, who numbers among his more important sidelines murder, hoarding, and dealing in the "black market."

Throughout the picture, the pace of the story never slackens, though the suspense is relieved the whole time by a good leavening of comedy. The photography on the whole was good, particularly effective use being made of low-key work during the latter half, and the direction was excellent. The acting, on the whole, was quite adequate, although unfortunately it was rather hard at times to forget that George Brent was George Brent.

The second feature was a topical little story about German and Japanese fifth columnists and saboteurs on the Pacific coast and their attempts to destroy an aeroplane factory. The stars of the picture were a time-bomb and a coloured boy (Willie Best). The former built up plenty of suspense from beginning to end, and the latter helped to break it up with comedy. There was also a bus full of other people and the saboteurs who moved in and out of the picture with the plot. There was no lagging in the action, and the film was quite good on the whole, though nowhere outstanding.

The program was rounded off with a technical short on sport, which made up in interest what it lost through poor colour photography, and the newsreel.

More Defence

The Editor-in-Chief, McGill Daily. Dear Sir,

"Words are like leaves, and where they most abound, Much fruit of sense beneath is seldom found."

Permit me to add my humble quota of congratulations for your having printed that incoherent mass of verbiage concocted by that unique personality—Mr. H. C. F. Shatan. The palpable lack of decency demonstrated in his epistle has deservedly served to make his name anathema on the campus. Already, in fact, a certain odour, reminiscent of that of a familiar rodent, surrounds the sound of his name.

Mr. Shatan reads nothing but the letter forum, the exchange features, and the jokes. But he is still perfectly competent, undoubtedly by virtue of his telepathic insight, to estimate the value of the other sections of the Daily. University scholars are supposedly endowed with some intelligence, but it is aggravating to observe that the demonstration of this is reserved only for written examinations. It is to be hoped that Mr. Shatan's indiscriminate will not adversely affect the status of those who have similar social and political affiliations as he theoretically has. Let this individual realise that such callous aspersions cast up the motives and ideals of the Daily Editor neither make the latter's job any easier, nor improves the status of McGill students in the eyes of onlookers. 'Twere better if Mr. Shatan learnt to preserve his mighty egoistic outbursts from within hearing distance of an unenthusiastic public.

Yours very truly,
WINSTON MAHABIR.

The Editor, McGill Daily. Dear Sir,

With reference to yesterday's editorial concerning Allen students, I would like to offer many congratulations.

The issue which has arisen at the University of Toronto is one worthy of note and I feel that the action taken by a large percentage of the Varsity student body is justified (Continued on Page Four)

REDMEN BOW TO TARs IN N.D.H.L. GAME

Navy Maintains Fast Clip in Hockey Loop With 4-3 Win Friday

Redmen Score Twice in First Period But Lose Out in Closing Seconds

By ARNOLD SCHRIER

Ralph Buchanan jammed in two goals to power the Navy to a 4-3 decision over McGill C.O.T.C. Friday night before 1,500 fans at the Forum. This second straight victory for the sailors established them as sole leaders of the National Defence Hockey League.

The Redmen scored twice in the first period, while their netminder, Ross Ritchie, foiled Navy threats time after time. Bob Blair and Bud Farmer made the light flash on after receiving passes from Johnny Costigan and Dick Lockwood respectively. The Redmen seemed to hold the upper hand in the initial period although both teams were playing cautious hockey.

NAVY TIES SCORE

But early in the second frame the seamen grabbed the advantage and came storming in toward the Red net. Buchanan, their flashy centre, twice snared the puck at mid-ice, wheeled and broke quickly, and beat Ritchie on both occasions. The crowd was in a thunderous roar as the Navy put on their power plays, but Ward, who did a fine job on the defence, took a pass from Hale as they both broke away, and rammed the rubber into the lower corner of the net.

Then came a wild third period. The Redmen tightened up, hanging grimly to their one goal lead. But the sailors attacked time and again. It was young Harry Poulton who finally tied it up after three minutes of play when he stole the puck from a Redman at centre ice, swooped in fast and let fly a blistering shot that slid between Ritchie and the post for the equalizing center.

The line of Read, Poulton, and Poulson hurled itself repeatedly against the McGill outfit, and time after time their attacks were staved off by the brilliant saves of Ross Ritchie. But twice the Red team broke away and were in scoring position, only to lose their golden opportunities by wild shooting. But disaster hit the Redmen when Ward was sent to the cooler for holding with less than three minutes left to play. Ritchie was relentlessly showered with shots by the pressing tars, but after making three quick stops, Anton sent a shot in against the boards behind the net, Poulson received the rebound, sent a pass to Poulton, and his stick smacked the puck into the twine. Twenty-two seconds later the game ended.

The Navy squad were very fast on the attack and the forwards were ably backed up by Anton, MacFarlane, and Eagan on the defence. On the McGill side, Ross Ritchie played his usual cool and spectacular game in goal. The front line of Farmer, Blair, and Costigan also stood out.

West Hill Tops Vermont Squad in Grid Exhibition

In an unexciting but interesting exhibition football tilt at the Loyola grounds on Saturday afternoon, West Hill defeated a visiting Burlington, Vermont squad 9-0. The feature of the contest was the use of both American and Canadian grid rules, which afforded a chance to the 1,500 who braved the winter weather to compare the two types of play.

West Hill took the lead early in the first quarter. Doug Harvey carried the mail around left end up to the visitors' twenty-two, and after an off-side penalty gained more yardage, when he gambled with a pass on the fourth down, taken by Flack on the five, from where he struggled to the two-yard stripe, Frank Donnelly carried over for a major score, which was converted by Harvey. The score remained 7-0, with both sides holding fast.

The play was featured by the Americans' aerial display, by which they tried to overcome their lack of weight on the line. Of twenty-two attempts, eight were completed and four were intercepted. The other West Hill points came in the fourth quarters when Meyers recovered a fumbled kick, for a touch-from-fumble, ending the scoring at 9-0.

AGENCIES' SERVICES COVER WIDE FIELD

"More porridge, please!" Unlike Oliver Twist, this little girl at Federated Charities' Montreal Day Nursery has no hesitation in asking. The Nursery gives kindergarten training, three nourishing meals a day, an afternoon nap in the fresh air and a few hours of supervised play daily to about 100 smaller children of mothers who, but for this service, would not be free to work to support their families.

Learning is good fun for the boys shown above, who live at Weredale House, one of the 31 agencies in Federated Charities. Education is only one of the many activities at the institution. Many of the boys who have graduated return and the great majority report successful careers.

These are a nurse's hands. They have washed babies and sick people and old people. They have bandaged the injured. They have fought epidemics and disease. They have relieved human pain and suffering from the first minute of life until the last. They are beautiful hands, because they have a job to do and are trained to do it. But they will be tied, unless you help. The Victorian Order of Nurses is but one of the 31 agencies in Federated Agencies, now seeking your support.

BRING CHANCE IN LIFE TO THE YOUNG—COMFORT TO THE HELPLESS AND AGED

Montreal's youngest citizens grow hale and hearty under the watchful eye of the Child Welfare Association, one of the 31 agencies in Federated Charities. Nearly 5,000 babies and pre-school children were registered in the Child Welfare Association Health Centres last year. These were given health supervision in clinics and homes by the staff, which was composed of physicians, dentists, nurses, a special worker in mental hygiene, one in nutrition and a part-time X-ray technician.

Disease, suffering, accident and death do not withhold their hands because Canada is at war. The crippled and helpless do not walk, the blind do not see, the deaf do not hear, the aged do not grow young, the bruised and broken, eager and refreshed again as the vigorous and virile move into the line of battle. Those who need strengthening and understanding in mind and character stand in no less need of skilled help in these days of strain. The care of the aged, an important field covered by the Family Welfare Association, is far more than a matter of dollars and cents. It calls for that understanding that can banish fear, as most men fear this period of life because to many of them it denotes all sorts of dependencies—financial, physical, mental.

and is highly appropriate at this time. This week marked observance of International Students Day—by students of many lands—indeed are we not now concerned with helping rather than hindering the academic work of others? As was stated in the Daily editorial—and this merits repetition, if the British authorities deem it practical to allow these foreign students to continue their studies, what reasons have Toronto authorities for their ridiculous decisions.

Sincerely,

Francis moved not; he stared at her. He could not stand and see a hapless female die! No matter how bad she had been he could not let

But he finally did move when the matches with which he had been lighting his pipe burnt his fingers. With a howl he hurled them from him and, by pure chance, they landed in the oven.

Within an hour Chlothilde gathered up what remained of her, and went out of the house, and out of his life—forever. He was rich.
